The Power of Stillness

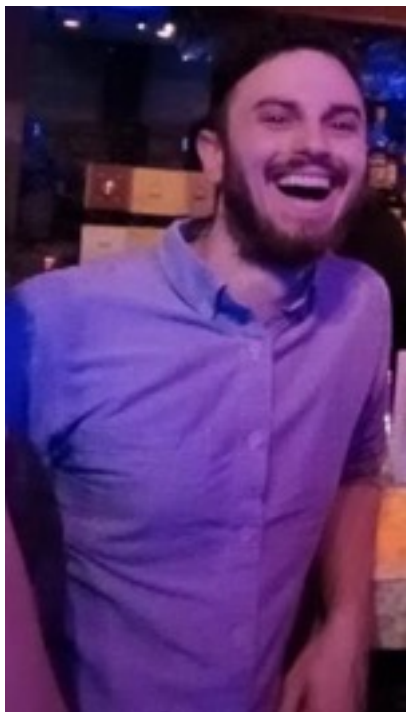

BY Gino Crededio Jr.-Director Patatine School of Metaphysics

Stillness is one of the core tenets of our School. It's certainly taught to our students very early on in their education. It has tremendous power in what it can do for your mental wellbeing and the forward motion of our hectic, American lives. It is something so simple that it can be forgotten or swept aside by that busy life. I know that was true for me.

For some time, years upon reflection really, I had slowly become mired in the physical. The calls of leadership in business, family and even here at the School demand a certain extending of our awareness into the world and, by extension, our conscious minds. It's all too easy to let happen. Actually, step by step, we rationalize putting off exercises for completing tasks. Piece by piece, we stop communicating with our inner peace to communicate with those we lead or partner with. Thought by thought, we allow our minds to become ensnared in so much physical thinking that the memory of the way we had once been is a distant one if we even remember it at all.

Problem solving becomes prioritized over intuition, and in that fatal shift, we find ourselves beset by all the suffering a mind reliant on the brain entails. I don't think of this as wrong necessarily. It's just a part of the spiral of our learning.

Having suffered for a time, life began to stagnate. It pains me to admit, but I actually forgot what it meant to have hope, to have vision, to have a connection to my Lord God and my soul. In truth, I can't believe this happened. Yet if we are true to the inner urge, such movements in consciousness can only last so long. Eventually, we always find our way back, and we come through the experience wiser and more powerful than before.

My teacher, Kerry, sat across from me in class one night. The class before I had spilled my guts about how I just wasn't moving and how deeply unhappy I had become. I'm sure he spent a lot of time thinking what I needed. That night I had gone last amongst my classmates and was the one to admit I had essentially failed in my discipline, having hardly done any exercises in two weeks. It was not the first time either. He did not blame or scold me. He asked me why, to which I explained it seemed to me that I did not possess the skill needed to accomplish the work so I avoided it. If the exercises required a concentration of 6 out of 10, I felt like maybe I had a 2.

Dr. Kerry really wanted us to get something out of our lesson. He has long preached that the two most important skills we offer are single-pointed concentration and undivided attention. He wanted us to know these skills and to focus all our attention upon them. He had us drop our assigned exercises and instead return to the candle as well as set a goal for practicing undivided attention on a number of tasks every day. It stirred my inner urge, but I had little hope in the classroom as I swear to you that I felt so scattered, I remember nothing else we spoke of that evening.

Over the next two weeks, I lived and breathed the practice. I'm quite proud of my discipline and quite glad of the wisdom to not be attached to how well I performed. Because it was not pretty at first. I drove without music or background YouTube. I washed dishes and allowed my mind nothing else. I walked down streets focussing my eyes with all my might on my destination. I made my candle marks, and I resisted the urge to fall into my old ways. The change was staggering.

For the first time in years, my mind became still once more. It was amazing. The itch, like one might have to some compulsive vice, to constantly fill empty space with some noise or new thought died so easily. Its power was robbed. My dreams, once full of conflict and inaction, became vibrant and telling in ways that continue to amaze. Anxiety, though still present, passed over me in waves leading to places of profound, simple love; and most of all, the inner busyness I became so addicted to was replaced by this simple stillness. I could finally see the mind for what it was. I could finally breathe.

I cannot say that all of the limitations of the mind were overcome in a mere two weeks. There are still struggles and a vigilant work to be done, but I stand in awe of how much my life has changed in such little time. The gratitude I feel that my soul somehow not only retained all of the understanding it had built in this life and surely others but so readily returned these gifts to me is just so simple and deep that I don't know what to say.

Stillness is a subtle joy. More rare and dignified than man gives it credit for. If you let it, it can be the foundation of happiness – the safe place upon which you may create the life and the mind you desire. It's right there waiting for you. It is won through our introspection and willingness to choose to focus ourselves. All it entails is that we give up the poison apple our busy thoughts promise. I cannot believe what this small challenge has done for me because from where I sit typing, it just feels like it saved me. It is my hope that it may save you too.

“What lies behind us and what lies before us are tiny matters compared to what lies within us.”

Kelly Croy, Taylor Obermeier, and Maria Sylla led 15 participants through a Manifestation Workshop as one of their expansion projects. They have an immense amount of wisdom and experience to share and it was such an amazing experience to share and it was such an amazing experience to witness them SHINE! Participants were attentive and engaged and we received such great feedback, including one participant that manifested $500 on a $2 scratch-off ticket a couple days after the event.

Marcus Croft continues to serve and expand through his experiences leading lectures including his latest lecture entitled, "Living Life With Love".

Thomas Croft is gearing up to share more of his understandings in an upcoming Visualization Short Course beginning March 21st @7pm.

If you are in the St.Louis area, we would love for you to join us for one of our upcoming classes or events.

4 Week Visualization Short Course

Manifestation Workshop
Maria Sylla

The expansion project my classmates and I led on Thursday, March 10, 2022, was one of the greatest I've done. Divine friendships were created. We shared the knowledge each of us obtained in manifesting our desires with other like-minded individuals. What I learned most, through this project, is that being present in all that we do is important. The moments when we are most present are the most precious. There's no attention placed on the past, nor the future. We rehearsed our speeches quite a bit before the workshop. We went over what was going to be said, and who was going to say what. However, once the workshop started, all this seemed to have gone out the window. We were each very centered in what we were doing and we were able to bounce off each other quite well. I had my entire portion of the workshop written out, and had gone over it with others. None of what I said during the workshop was rehearsed. Divine, cosmic energy flowed through each and every one of us. Everyone in the room was engaged in the workshop. We created divine friendships throughout the workshop. The participants were engaged in sharing their knowledge, as much as we were engaged in sharing ours. This created a beautiful, loving atmosphere. We were all interacting and learning from one another. I believe the atmosphere of divine friendship was created because we stayed present. If we had gone with what we rehearsed, and stuck strictly to our outlines, we would not have been able to engage so much with the participants, nor been able to flow as graceful as we did. I am truly grateful for the experiences we all shared and gained through this workshop.

Moving in a New Direction

By Stella Lynn Boggio

For the last several years, I have contemplated moving to a new location. I have been living, at my mother's house. She is in her senior years and in need of caregiving services. Living, under her roof, put me in the position of being her primary caregiver. I acclimated to this scenario, for quite some time. However, aspects of myself were restless and confused. I love my mother and desire to assure her care. Also, my life is valuable and I have a purpose and a mission as well.

I have a tendency to put my needs and desires last while putting others first. This was really clear, from my Lesson Nine Past Life Profile. In that lifetime, I was married and I had seven children of my own. My husband's brother died and we took in five more children. The report went on to say I acclimated to this but I had a considerable amount of resentment. I felt overwhelmed by my duties and responsibilities. My husband, in that lifetime, was concerned about how to pay for what was needed. However, he was not concerned with the additional workload. This caused a divide between us.

When I compare the significance, to this lifetime, I see where I can take on too many responsibilities and not be true to myself. While it is noble to help others, losing myself, in the process is not healthy. In reality, it is not healthy for anyone involved.

As I write this, I have made the decision to move to the School Branch in Indianapolis. My teacher, Kerry Keller, has encouraged me for years. Although I have contemplated moving, I did not set any serious action plans into motion. However, over the last six months, I have had several events stimulate this desire. I kept reflecting on a statement, in a previous Intuitive Report. It said, "It would benefit this one to live in a different city and work in a different location." The reason for this relocation would be to know my creative power more. I have also felt stagnant for the last several months. I have contemplated changing jobs but was extremely indecisive on how this would work. I also was not sure if I wanted to stay in Cincinnati or finally make that move. I had been discussing moving with my mom's other caregiver who was more than willing to assume my responsibilities.

Another factor, in my decision to move, was a recent Health Analysis. It stated that "When this one is indecisive, this one prevents the forward motion as this one truly desires it to be.

What I learned was by being indecisive, I was preventing myself from the life I desired.

Two weeks ago, I made the decision to move. I talked to my boss and arranged a transfer with my job. I made arrangements with my mom's caregiver. I also informed Kerry I would be moving into the school.

My most important learning, in this experience, is any decision is better than no decision. By not deciding, in effect, I am prohibiting my forward progress and staying stagnant.

I also realized that I am never going to be guaranteed outcomes of any decision. I can research, plan and ask questions. However, I am never going to know the effects of all my decisions. One article I read on decision making suggested when someone knows forty percent of the possible outcomes, it's time to make a decision. That was very freeing advice.

Lastly, one of my dreams gave me clear insight. In the dream. A man who was a little older, in his late fifties, handed me a card that looks like a card from the Monopoly game.. He said the card indicated I should move to pursue my dreams. It had told me this before, but I had not listened. I felt encouraged by the message, in my dream.

I am excited about my move. I know I will be releasing limitations and embracing new parts of myself. More will be revealed as I expand on my journey of expansion and discovery.

Springfield

What am I learning? –

TJ Jackson-Bey-Student, Missouri State University

Hopefully all the right stuff. I am learning how to be.

First, how to be. What does that mean? When I manifested in this body, I began taking on roles, rules, definitions, and so forth. This is normal in society. In this timeframe, part of the human experience seems to be assimilating a set of criteria that makes this person this person, and that person that person. For example, I am a man or woman. I am a Christian or a Muslim. I am an American. I am proud to be an American. I don't lie. I like mild autumn days, or I like humid summer nights. After so long, all these roles, rules, and definitions begin to conflict with one another and with other people's roles, rules, and definitions.

Now, there is nothing wrong with this process. In fact, I might compare it, maybe not directly, but, to what a soul does. A soul collects understandings based on it's experiences and learning. This is similar to what the manifested human is doing. For example, when someone learns how genders are defined, they take on the role of a man or woman. Ok, maybe this is a bad example nowadays. Or is it? I'll come back to that. Or, someone learns about a religious or philosophical tradition and now, I am a Buddhist Warrior Ninja Monk or maybe I am a teacher in the School of Metaphysics. The difference is what the soul collects are PERMANENT understandings. What the manifested human is collecting; these roles, rules, and definitions; typically, are not. I want to emphasize that this does not make them wrong or right. What can happen, though, is these temporary things begin to cover up the permanent understandings. Since there can be difficulty perceiving what is permanent and what is temporary, and the temporary is what is closest to the surface, the most accessible, one might have trouble trying to make a permanent application of a temporary characteristic. For example, supposed someone has been told, all their lives, that real men don't cry, and they have adopted this role, rule, and definition. So, now this guy is afraid to express a feeling lest he question his manhood. Here's a doozy of a society rule: People don't change. This one is so deeply embedded; we even have the government enforce it. Felon! Convict! So, a person can end up shoehorning themselves into a role, rule, or definition that either no longer applies, or just plain is not accurate in the first place.

Let's go back to taking on the role of a man or a woman. Real men don't cry, right? I don't know about you, but when I was growing up, there was an ever-growing list of what it is to be a boy or a man, and by god, if you didn't check off enough boxes, your butt is gay. Right? So, now there is a rebellion of these definitions. Personal opinion: You can't solve this problem just making up a bunch of other definitions, LGBTQ, etc. Now, that's not PC and, to be clear, not a judgement. If the root cause is ascribing permanent value to a temporary thing, then I think the base of the solution they have chosen is not far off. Unsubscribe from that set of rules.

Now what does any of this have to do with me learning "how to be". I am learning to disengage from the baggage I have picked up in this body. All my roles, rules, and definitions were weighing me down and conflicting with one another. I am learning that I can just be. I don't have to shoehorn everything to which I have subscribed. I don't have to question my manhood. I don't have to claim to be this or that. I can just be. I have the freedom of choice again. Because I can still step into a role, rule, or definition as needed, but it doesn't have to be permanent. Knowing the difference is what I am learning.

Interview with Dr. Daniel

Monthly Series on the Book of Matthew

By Stella Lynn Boggio

I interviewed Dr. Daniel Condron regarding the Book of Matthew Chapter 3.

In Chapter 3, of the Book of Matthew, John the Baptist was preaching in the Wilderness of Judea. In this chapter, John says "I am only baptizing you with water for repentance; but he who is coming after me is greater than I, one whose shoes I am not worthy to remove; he will baptize you with the Holy Spirit and with fire."

However, Jesus came from Galilee, to be baptized by John. John tried to stop him, but Jesus said, "Permit it now, for this is necessary for us so that all righteousness may be fulfilled."

I asked Dr. Daniel, "What is the main message of Matthew Chapter 3?"

It is important to remove doubt from one's mind and replace it with open minded believing. The next step is to apply, in one's life, what one has come to believe in order to develop the ability to know the truth. Jesus said, "You shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free."

"What is the truth that will set someone free?"

Jesus said, "I and the Father are one." The true nature of reality is connectedness. The great illusion is separation. Believing the truth always comes before knowing the truth. This is because the truth must be practiced and applied in our lives to be made known.

Why did Jesus ask John to baptize him?

Because believing the truth always comes before knowing the truth. Jesus knew the truth of oneness. From then on, Jesus taught the great miracles that are possible with oneness. The five physical senses of sight, smell, taste, touch and sound are compensatory devices designed to enable us to function in the physical world where the illusion of separation is strongest. Even though Jesus had five senses, in his physical body, he was able to simultaneously function through the higher sense awareness of consciousness and being to know the true nature of reality is connectedness and oneness.

How do we define a miracle?

A miracle is a creation that is not possible through the illusion of separation.

The NEW MAITREYA ~ the Individual in a Group

National Dream Hotline® ... an inner level connection

Twilight times are major portals of transformation. They happen when we move from an unconscious state of sleep to a conscious state of wakefulness.

When we close our eyes, we end a day and begin a twilight time. Part of us enters into alternate realities. Sometimes we recall our experiences there. When we do, we wake with a thought Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. impressed into the collective consciousness decades ago. A thought that resounded around the world.

What was that thought? "I have a dream!"

Dr. King's dream is a daydream. His daydream became a vision when he shared these thoughts and words with thousands of people. They opened the hearts and minds of others who said, "YES!" to what he described. I was 10 years old when King gave his speech on the mall in Washington DC. I remember seeing it on television (no personal computers or cellphones yet). That was 1963.

Where were you? Maybe you were in the bardo, inbetween lives. In the cue, waiting to be born. Yet I'll venture that you have heard, "I have a dream" somewhere along your way.

The INDIVIDUAL DREAMER in a GROUP of DREAMERS

I was speaking with a recent SOM grad about the continual dreaming of an educational place, open to all people, that teaches the universal laws and truths to anyone willing to learn. In the 70s, this became a common dream for hundreds of people, represented by thousands of pennies collectively saved. Those pennies (some 700,000+ of them) as a downpayment to purchase land in 1982. Land that is now known as the College of Metaphysics.

The birth of COM is an example of the New Maitreya.
So is National Dream Hotline®.

This Hotline took its name from the outreach (national) of a unique SOM teaching (dreams as a language of the mind) that students wanted to make available to all whenever they need expert advice (hotline). It is a great example of literally dreaming something into the collective consciousness. (See sidebar)

Over the years, the hotline activities have provided an annual opportunity for students to hone their interpretation skill while bringing enlightened thought to another person. The last weekend in April has provided a venue for creativity, invention, and innovation on a local level in cities that support SOM branches. From movie tie-ins like "Inception" to Dream Bingo to online summits, dreaming together is a living example of the New Maitreya.

So is transcending dreaming.

This is where the interior, individual work resides.

WHERE DO YOU GO WHEN YOU SLEEP?

When your conscious mind sleeps, what happens to the "you" that you of your daytime hours?

Do we just forget who we are and escape into a dreamland where we are married instead of single? Retired rather than opening our own business? A child instead of approaching 40?

We dream while awake. We dream while asleep. Where is the connection? Are our dreams a series of "dropped calls" from a "poor reception" of partial words and images from a caller we don't recognize? Becoming the connector of the inner and outer worlds makes for a life worth examining. When you decide to become an interpreter of dreams, you are that connector. Your dreams begin coming true.

SELF RESPECT • SELF AWARENESS • SELF REVELATION

The capacity to dream stirs an inner connection with the divine. This connection transcends the limits of your daytime thinking where the mind is subject to worldly conditioning. What does this mean? Author Wayne Dyer described it well years ago, before the spread of cellular devices.

"A mind virus is different in that there is no form to it; these are ideas placed in our heads when we are little. We get programmed by well-meaning people like our parents and their parents, our culture, religions and schools. We get conditioned to believe in our limitations and what's not possible."

That's a viable description of what is commonly called negative self-talk. In a weakened mind, unconscious brain chatter drowns out the quiet inner voice during daytime hours. The older (and wiser) Subconscious mind becomes a slave to an endless stream of conscious fears and desires. Subconscious mind, home to intuition, is at the mercy of conscious mind commands. As tAlbert Einstein observed, "The intuitive mind is a sacred gift and the rational mind is a faithful servant. We have created a society that honors the servant and has forgotten the gift."

Personally embodying wisdom is a viable reason for remembering our nighttime dreams. Remembering and interpreting your dreams directs the mind toward insight into where you came from and where you are going. Self trust, courage, and generosity result from your practice. Every time you sleep you create the opportunity to receive an intuitive report - produced, directed, and written by your very own Subconscious mind.

Cooperating with your inner Self in this manner closes the Dream Consciousness Circuit in you. Think of it as an electric lamp. If the positive, negative, and neutral circuits are properly aligned, you can turn on that lamp with the simple thought, "Let there be light!" And there is light. That's the beginning student's joy.

The advanced student's joy is like a designing engineer who develops skills and puts them to use through acts of creating. That's how the lamp you purchased and the room where you have placed it came about. They were invented through dreaming by a creator probably working with other creators. The New Maitreya.

The master student's joy comes through witnessing the dreaming. In the Hindu tradition, this is called Turiya. For the Buddhist it is dream yogas. Those familiar with the Jungian tradition will recognize it as Big Dreams. These are encounters with wisdom. They transcend knowledge and understanding.

At this level of practice, Spirit speaks to us through dreamtime.

Have you noticed that dreamers appear in myths and teachings throughout the world?

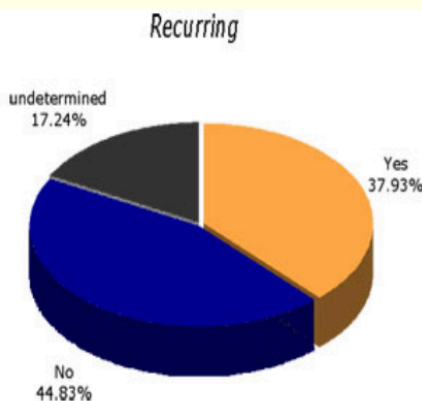

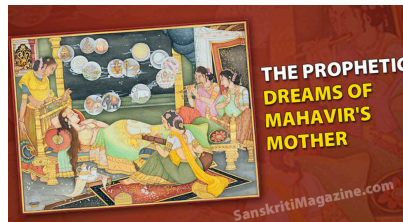

From Black Elk to Biblical

Josephs to Queen Trishala, humanity's dreamers keep us reaching through the power of image-making. They move us forward toward and into an improved existence for us all. The New Maitreya.

Dream awareness is a simple opportunity, occurring daily that encourages an expansion of your consciousness. Fears dissolve, clairvoyance rises. Love and Compassion grow. As your relationship with your Beloved deepens, every relationship in your daytime hours adjusts accordingly. The 'national' part of your internal 'dream hotline' are the thousands aspects of Self.

Conscious dreaming is the greatest story ever told. Tell yours with great love and wisdom is yours!

Intuitive Reports and Dreams

From The College

Mari Hamersley

Especially in Intuitive Health Analysis, recording and interpreting your dreams is sometimes mentioned as a way to know yourself more deeply and become aware of the value of insight from your subconscious self. In fact, just as dreams offer us Truth from subconscious mind, intuitive reports come from the same place in mind. And just as dreams do, they offer us a picture of where we are and where we can go from here in our daily consciousness and further beyond that.

Here is wisdom given to one woman to return to the desires of the soul and suggestions for how to do that.

“We see that there are ways in which this one has compromised the self and has disconnected from desires of the soul that this one has initiated. Would suggest to this one that it would be of importance for this one to rediscover and recommit to these soul desires, this soul urge and for this one to cause there to be more discipline in this one’s environment. Would suggest that it would be beneficial for this one to pray on a regular basis as well as chant mantras that are in alignment with this one’s soul urge. Would suggest that this would aid in assisting the vibrational frequency of this one’s environment to reflect who it is that this one desires to become and who this one is becoming.” 7-14-2014-SMB-4

And another health analysis offers suggestions for taking it further.

“We see this one to be at a point of change. There is a kind of opening to receiving something new in the self, to a new kind of existence. It would aid this one to evaluate what has brought this one to this place in the self, the choices this one has made, the actions that this one has taken, what this one has learned, what this one regrets, what this one appreciates so that this one could develop a kind of honesty in assessing who this one is. This then could aid this one in becoming open to what might be next.” 8-31-2015-LJC-DRC-3

It is important to both know where we are in our consciousness and where we can go next so that our soul can be known and our spiritual growth continue.
